

In the resuscitation debates told my father of being out for-arising several years before with the fleet from Lundy when some one shined a paddle & brought up the rest. He had the body of a woman which he had found afloat. She was a good looking middle aged woman, dressed in a nice black silk dress. Had not been in the water long enough to decompose at all. The Indians were greatly disturbed but did not know what to do. In their ignorance & mortal dread of small pox they imagined she had died & been thrown on board, so not daring to come too near they tossed the body to the nearest island that was uninhabited. But here the people were as scared as the Indians and refused the body burial so what could they do but toss it out to sea again and leave it.

Schattis told me how he once dived three times to the bottom of Pamedunook to free an anchor that was fast.
 John Pro said he would give him the best hat in Bangor for it.
