

Sugar loaf. I shall be glad to go on your account of the road, and will be prompt. Earlier I thought the Pit might be a root meaning pointed or peaked, but I see these cases all accord much better with the idea of a mountain pushed or broken up from the surface - the root involving the idea of the rounded mountain - I find this all very firmly confirmed from the Chipewyan - Cree - ~~the~~ tongues which are very closely allied - surprisingly so - in their place-name roots. I have a lot of indications from the ^{Micmacs} Algonquians that the place name roots are far more conservative than the language as a whole - or in other words, some place name roots have become obsolete in Micmac in any strict connections - which of course is
