

"He been seen 'sme hachs", he said; "she gone straight ahead, we think so mid better learn 'sme lone. He took some rib-pole one camp, under rib-pole some clean shirt, some po'k, some other things. He left some camp few days; come back; some body's been there." He described the loss of his stamp and how he followed up the trail & found places where the walrus had buried different articles. In the night he came again. Polis saw him by torch light between the eyes & found him dead the next morning. While the night has been a calamity it was more like a walrusine.

Clara Neptune says that Joe Polis was 1st cousin to her father — Mitchell; they were sons of Trims & very intimate. (They were both of the Bear gens. Joe Polis was son of Polim Wasaboe.) She declares that he went to Seward & got medals from the queen; he got wrong also medals of it, but they thought he buried it, for they could not find it. On his death bed he sent for her because she was a favorite. She says he had no son children, but an adopted son (does not say what name of him). He married out of the tribe. His brother Pullpoor kept a companion Jomzekin (Jomzekin appears on den Blake's roll 8184 as being 32 souls) who was mother of Peter W. Rance & died with so my many gens since.

Peter W. Rance says same of Jomzekin, who was his mother.
